Funeral of Aaron Flory.
Aaron Flory was buried at 2:30 this afternoon, from the Church of the Immaculate Conception, a large concourse of friends attending the solemn ceremonies.

It had been well known for years that when he should die, Aaron desired to be buried by the Eagles and Red Men, in both of which organizations he was a prominent and active member; but Mrs. Flory ruled it otherwise and the two societies took no official part in the burial ceremonies.

Aaron Flory was born at Lawrence, Kansas, in 1868, his father being a farmer. The ancestry of the family was of Scotch-Irish descent. Aaron left home in 1876, going first to Colorado. He came to Albuquerque in 1880, afterwards going to Flagstaff, Arizona. About 1887 or 88 he returned to Albuquerque where he had ever since resided. For ten years he was employed at the Sturges' hotel, but for the last five years he had been at the Zeiger Cafe. His uncle, Joe Flory, a few years ago was a candidate for the governorship of Missouri on the republican ticket.

Aaron Flory was a man of whom all spoke well who knew him. The good feeling of his heart was shown in a constant smile on his lips, and a pleasant word of greeting to every one. But down below that was a charity which never turned the needy away. No man was to him in need, who did not get assistance. His liberality often exceeded his means and kept him from being a wealthy man. He leaves no children, but he does leave a memory which will remain green in many hearts for years. Rest to his ashes, peace to his soul.
